Summary

Ever since I was a little kid, technology has been one of my leading passions. I still remember the first pc I used to play games and search the web. This passion carried me to pursue my BS and MS degrees in computer science during which I learned new development languages, algorithms, compilers, software engineering and many more. During my work experience as a software developer, I engaged in every detail related to software development including the business and the development sides. I found my self pleased to expand my scope of work to engage with business analysis and project management teams while working on various development projects. And that's what helped in finding my real spark and drawing my next career path that leans towards business analysis roles. There is definitely a lot more to learn, solve, and improve. And for this, I am very excited.
